The Rolex Submariner is known for its resistance to water and was the first watch ever designed for deep sea diving. Submersible up to 980 feet or 300 meters, the Rolex Submariner far outperformed the earlier "waterproof" watch models whose maximum sustained water resistance only went to 200 meters or 660 feet of pressure.

Rolex debuted the Submariner in 1953 specifically as a tool watch for scuba divers. As a result, Rolex included very specific features on the Submariner to ensure that it is a practical diver's watch. It featured a stainless steel case and a stainless steel bracelet for durability and anti-corrosion properties.
