student scores reflect different amounts of instruction. Under such circumstances, normative comparisons will be unfair, for example, if students with 16 weeks of instruction are compared to students with 20 weeks of instruction. Like the 2015 norms, the 2020 norms accommodate this scheduling flexibility by constructing time-continuous norms.

I am typically a good student and scored in the 95% on my TEAS exam. I am struggling with discerning what to know and not to know in my fundamentals class as I am in my first clinical. My teacher does not believe in study guides and all I have to go on are student learning outcomes that do not match up with what is in the slides.
