Vanishing Ireland

Created by Turtle Bunbury and James Fennell, the Vanishing Ireland project interviews elderly members of society about their lives and times. The onset of Covid19 has prompted author and historian Turtle Bunbury to reignite Vanishing Ireland. There is a sense of urgency to record the often-incredible memories of the older generation.

VANISHING IRELAND

Vanishing Ireland is a beautiful, but sobering book. Fennell and Bunbury set out across Ireland to capture and preserve the stories of ordinary Irish people, people who worked the land, worked with horses, worked on the water, celebrated the music.

Loughareema, also known as the Vanishing Lake, is located on the coast road, just a few miles from the seaside town of Ballycastle in Ireland. The lake sits on a leaky chalk-bed with a “plug hole” that often becomes jammed with peat causing the Loughareema depression to fill, especially during heavy rain.

In a sense, Ireland is vanishing before our eyes. This book, with its 149 plates in Black & White, seeks to capture Ireland as it is and was, for the future will change everything. The People, the Land, the Sea, and the Ruins will evolve, but on these pages, will remain frozen for a moment in time.
